~ PRESS RELEASE ~

October 12, 2010

Great seats available for Country Music duo, Bomshel, at the Charlotte Performing Arts Center

Few young women are equally at ease penning a poignant hit about a friend battling cancer or simply knocking back tequila with Kix Brooks, but then again you can always count on Bomshel to embrace the extremes and, like their name implies, deliver the unexpected. The duo will perform onstage at the Charlotte Performing Arts Center on Saturday, October 30 at 7:30 pm.

With the release of their first CD, "Fight Like a Girl", Bomshel propelled themselves into country music stardom. Well known for their vivacious personalities and sense of musical adventure, this talented twosome has produced a collection of well-crafted songs that have earned them the respect of fans coast-to-coast. The single "Fight Like a Girl" was written in honor of a close friend who was diagnosed with breast cancer at a young age and lost her battle after 8 years of fighting.

"I really wanted to gear it towards all women," says Kelly Shepard, one of the members of Bomshel, of how they crafted the song. "With our moms, sisters and grandmas, I've always really admired their persistence through the tough times. I think women have an amazing ability to endure. It's a positive thing to fight like a girl because girls are a lot stronger on the inside. We don't want to put one meaning on this song. We want people to take it however they want to take it. Whether they are a little girl or a woman struggling with something they really can't control. We don't want it to just be the cancer song because everyone has their own story."
